Borodin O., Borodina O. 2021. Fulgoromorpha & Cicadomorpha (Hemiptera) of Latvia. Current state of study. Acta Biol. Univ. Daugavp., 21 (2): 155 – 184.

This research is considered as an analysis of publications and studies of Latvian cicadas. The annotated checklist is provided and includes 373 species, 146 genera from 7 families, 2 suborders. For the species which require confirmation for Latvia separate checklist was formed and presented.

Key words: Fulgoromorpha, Cicadomorpha, planthoppers, leafhoppers.

INTRODUCTION

Cicadas are an ancient group of insects which are thriving today. Traditionally, they were considered as one of the 5 suborders of Cicadinea, or Auchenorrhyncha (Zabrawkin 2001). Currently, cicadas are considered as two independent suborders - Fulgoromorpha and Cicadomorpha of Hemiptera order along with suborders Heteroptera and Sternorrhyncha (Cryan 2004, 2005a-b, 2010).

Cicadas are a well-studied taxon for most of European countries and there are many entomologists and scientific groups who continue to study these insects and also utilizing most modern methods and techniques.

At the same time, there are some countries which did not carry out any cicadas-focused studies for more than a quarter of a century. One of the European regions with similar situation is Baltic states region, including Latvia. Most current information about cicadas for this region is patchy and usually could be find as as part of more extensive reports on biodiversity.

The first information on the cicadas of Latvia is dated to the second half of the 18th century [Fischer, 1778, 1784, 1791]. Later on, the information on the cicadas of Latvia was published in works of J. Groschke (1805), B.A. Gimmerthal (1846) and G. Flor (1861), J.H. Kawall (1865, 1866).

The research of Gustav August Adam von Flor “Die Rhynchoten Livlands” (Flow, 1961) is the first major summary of cicadas in Latvia. The work contains 170 species, 32 of which are described for the first time (Vilbaste 1960). The monograph is based on an extensive collection of cicadas collected in various regions of Livonia, including those belonging to the territory of modern Latvia, from 1851 to 1857. G. Flor collection materials are still stored in various natural history museums, in particular a significant part of the collection is in the Entomological Collection, Estonian University of Life Science (Abarenkov et al. 2010). Some of the materials from these collections and summaries were taken into account and critically worked out in later works on cicadas in Latvia (for example, Vilbaste 1960, Velce & Danka 1970, Vilbaste 1973, Spuris 1996b).

The next significant period of studies about cicadas of Latvia begins from second half of the XX century (Spuris 1955, Rasiņa 1957, Danca 1959a-b). Later on in 60-s, there were different publications focused on individual taxonomic groups of cicadas (Vilbaste 1960, Spuris 1966, Velce 1968a, Velce 1968c), regional diversity of Latvian cicadas (Danca 1961a, 1964) and practically significant groups (Danca 1961b, c, Velce 1961, 1964, 1969). In the same period, a Ph.D. thesis on the fauna and ecology of cicadas of the Latvian SSR was defended (Velce 1968b). Finally, in 1970 the first catalogue of cicadas in Latvia (Velce & Danka 1970) was published. This work was based on the results of previously published materials and includes 231 species of cicadas.

In the 1970s, research on cicadas was continued. In particular, a complete summary allowing assessing the degree of study of the taxon in Latvia and Lithuania was made by one of the largest specialists in cicadas in Europe, the Estonian entomologist J. Vilbaste (1974), in which 320 species are given for the territory of Latvia. In the same decade, the several significant works were published about cicadas of Latvia (Danka & Stiprais 1972, Velce 1972, Danka 1973, Spuris 1974, Varzinska 1979, Velce & Rupais 1979).

In the 1980-1990s, several works were published with data on the cicadas of Latvia (Turka & Reinsone 1981, Spuris 1982, 1996a-b, Varzinska 1983, Ozols 1985). The most noticeable work of R. Varzinska (1983), with data on the distribution of 111 species of cicadas in coastal zone of Gulf of Riga, indicating 2 species new for Latvia - Batracomorphus allionii (Turton, 1802) and Cosmotettix edwardsi (Lindberg, 1924). As well as the catalogue of cicadas of Latvia Z. Spuris (1996b), which contains an annotated list of cicadas registered by that time in Latvia. The catalog for each species contains a source of literature where the species was first indicated in the regional fauna. In total, 329 species are listed in the catalog.

The last major generalization on cicadas of Latvia is presented in the work on cicadas in Northern Europe (Söderman et al. 2009), where a list of 333 species is given for Latvia. In the first 2 decades of the 21st century, besides the specified work, only not numerous works on cicads of Latvia including data on the cicads collected in 2006 in Ziemupes Nature Reserve (Western Latvia) (Söderman & Spuņģis 2008) are known, to cicads as elements of separate ecosystems (Spuņģis 2002, 2008, Ziemelis 2012, Petrova et al. 2013).

Particular attention should be paid to the work on the directions of new species in Latvia. For example, V. Levins and A. Ziemelis [Ziemelis, 2012; Levins, Ziemelis, 2013; Ziemelis, 2014] authors indicate 15 new species for Latvia, 3 of which (Pentastiridius leporinus (Linnaeus 1761), Igutettix oculata (Lindberg, 1929) and Arboridia parvula (Boheman, 1845)), as our analysis showed, have already been registered in Latvia (see below). In 2013, a work was published on the spread of an invasive species of cicadas of Far Eastern origin, Igutettix oculata (Lindberg, 1929), which feeds on lilac [Stalazs, 2013], as well as a North American alien species, Graphocephala fennahi Young, 1977, which feeds on rhododendrons (Piterāns 2016).

Additionally, the separate data on cicadas of Latvia were provided in large catalogs on Cicadas of Palearctica (Nast, 1972), Europe (Nast 1982), Fennoscandia (Ossiannilsson 1978, 1981, 1983), and reports on distribution of separate species [Ануфриев & Емельянов 1988, Ануфриев & Кириллова 1998, 2001, Сивцев & Винокуров 2002, McKamey 2002, Бородин 2011].

The purpose of this work is to summarize all the information published to the date on the cicadas of Latvia.

MATERIAL AND METHODS

The list of the species in this work is provided in accordance with the current views on the taxonomy of the group. The list of publications for each species was provided with keeping the names of species used in these works. All species within genera are arranged in alphabetical order. After the annotated list, we provided the list of species which are still questionable or require additional confirmation, or species with not clear status for the territory of Latvia (like in the case of species indicated for the territory of Latvia in the works A. Gimmerthal (1846) and G. Flor (1861)).

DISCUSSION

Therefore, 373 species of cicadas related to 146 genera, 7 families and 2 suborders are currently registered in Latvia (Table 1). The habitation of 17 species in Latvia is in doubt.

The greatest taxonomic diversity is occurring in tribes Delphacini (Delphacidae), Typhlocybini, Macrostelini, Athysanini and Paralimnini (Cicadellidae), which is typical for this part of Eastern Europe (Borodin 2014, 2019).

To assess the degree of study of individual regions of Latvia, and the completeness of the coverage of taxonomic groups of cicadas, additional field studies need to be done, as well as analysis of materials stored in collection funds of Latvia (primarily in Latvian National Museum of Natural History, Museum of Zoology of University of Latvia, Institute of Biology, University of Latvia collections, Collection of University of Daugavpils) which containing, according to our preliminary analysis, at least 50,000 specimens of cicadas, many of which are still not identified to species level (Jankevica 2017, Kagainis et al. 2020).

The specimens stored in scientific organizations of other countries can also have significant interest. For example, in the collections Estonian Museum of Natural History, Natural History Museum of the University of Tartu, insect collection of the Estonian University of Life Sciences (Estonia) is stored several thousands of specimens of the cicadas collected in Latvia (Abarenkov et al. 2010).
